Tuberculosis (TB) is a rare condition in liver transplant recipients. We report the case of a 51-year-old man with primary sclerosing cholangitis (PSC), hepatitis C virus (HCV)-related cirrhosis, and multiple nodules in the lungs and hilar lymph nodes who developed a pulmonary TB after liver transplantation. The patient had pulmonary TB that first appeared on postoperative day (POD) 4, and the diagnosis was based on Ziehl-Neelsen staining of sputum and clinical signs of improvement. The patient underwent a successful 1-week antituberculous therapy with isoniazid, rifampin, and pyrazinamide. One month later, the patient had a repeated episode of TB with a pulmonary mass in his right lower lobe and hilar lymphadenopathy. A transbronchial lung biopsy revealed the diagnosis of TB. The patient received a 2-month antituberculous therapy with isoniazid, rifampin, and ethambutol. A repeat transbronchial lung biopsy confirmed the diagnosis. Two months later, the patient again had a relapse of TB with a nodular lesion in his left lung and a peripancreatic lymph node. Computed tomography-guided percutaneous abscess drainage of the nodule was performed. Six months after his third episode of TB, our patient was transferred to another hospital for a rehabilitation program. He has not experienced any signs of recurrence. The present report describes, for the first time, a patient who developed a disseminated TB after liver transplantation. Diagnosis of disseminated TB should be considered in liver transplant d4474df7b8
